Thus, the damping effect of the eddy current dissipation decreases and the risk of multipath interference increases. As a result, the positioning precision decreases. In a fourth prior art shown in FIG. 18, a large magnet is disposed in the magnetically controlled micromirror. The current for magnetization of the magnet is a sine waveform signal or a triangle waveform signal. This method has the problem of interference by the sine wave or triangle waveform current, as the same problem as the third prior art does. In a fifth prior art shown in FIG. 19, a sine wave magnetization current is applied to a large yoke using a bonding wire. This method is relatively simple in that it uses a sine wave magnetization current, which is directly applied to the yoke. However, the application of a sine wave magnetization current over a large distance causes distributional unevenness of 6d1f23a050
