The purpose of this paper is to describe and summarize the literature on traumatic hearing loss (THL) and make recommendations to the profession for practice and research. A systematic review was conducted of the literature through February 2015. Databases searched were Medline, CINAHL, Cochrane, PubMed, PubMed Central, Web of Science, ProQuest, Scopus, Cumulative Index to Nursing and Allied Health, and ResearchGate. Inclusion criteria were peer-reviewed research articles published in English, and providing a detailed description of an intervention for THL. Exclusion criteria were non-English language articles, animal or in vitro studies, articles that provided merely an epidemiological evaluation of THL, and papers that provided a comprehensive review of the literature. Thirty-nine articles were considered for inclusion. The evidence was evaluated using the Quality in Prognosis Studies (QUIPS) and the Quality in Prognosis and Clinical Prediction Studies (QUIPS 2) evaluation forms. The results of these tools were combined with the rigor of the study to determine the overall quality of the evidence. The majority of the studies were observational or case series, but were generally of moderate to high quality. There is consistent evidence that THL is associated with various demographic, environmental, and injury-related factors. On the basis of current evidence, the top
