Folate conjugation and transverse carboxylation of plasmalogens in the rat peroxisomes. Plasmalogens are a group of glycerophospholipids characterized by the presence of a vinyl ether linkage at sn-1 of the glycerol backbone. They serve as a reservoir of polyunsaturated fatty acids required for the synthesis of membrane phospholipids and also as a store of retinoic acid which is required for normal cellular differentiation.

Plasmalogens are metabolized primarily by phospholipases. The metabolism of plasmalogens in the peroxisomes is of particular interest since this organelle shows properties similar to mammalian placenta and both are known to be involved in a retinoic acid synthetic pathway. To study the metabolism of plasmalogens in the peroxisomes, we prepared a radioactively labeled rat liver plasmalogen extract and fractionated this extract by HPLC. Ten radioactively labeled forms of plasmalogens (1-10) were identified and purified by

HPLC. These HPLC fractions were analyzed by thin layer chromatography (TLC), mass spectrometry (MS) and gas chromatography-mass spectrometry (GC-MS) to be diacyl- and plasmeyl-derived plasmalogens. Only two HPLC fractions eluted very close to the elution position of monoacyl- and diacyl-derived plasmalogens (HPLC fraction 5 and 10). They contained the same plasmalogens as the HPLC

fractions which had been purified from the liposomes.

We conclude that plasmalogens in the rat liver are synthesized exclusively in the peroxisomes by two pathways. Firstly, through the reactions of diacyl- and plasmenyl-derived plasmalogens to acyl-acyl carrier protein, acyl-CoA or diacylglycerol. Secondly, by the reactions of monoacyl- and diacyl-derived plasmalogens to plasmenyl-
