Git repo on Travis-CI I have a local Git repo on my personal computer, and I wish to run testing on it via Travis-CI. I can do this via the command: git clone git@github.com:travis/foo-repo.git But now I wish to rename the repo to something more suitable for Travis-CI. Is there a way to do this with the repo information provided by the Travis-CI build, such as the repository URL? A: There are actually two different problems. The first one is that having local git cloned on your PC is not good for the environment for testing. Travis-CI provides the directory in which you will run your script, making sure that the environment is clean before the script starts. If you have a checked out repository, the environment is ready to be used. The second problem is the repository that you clone. This is c6a93da74d
