ThisWhen the Bangladesh air force began a massive operation to drive back militants from Cox's Bazar, the rain-drenched borderland was a dangerous place to be, especially for the thousands of Rohingyas who had fled their homeland after being targeted by a military crackdown. The Bangladeshi response to Tuesday night's attack on the Myanmar border in Rakhine State was so swift and so overwhelming that any Rohingya who were still there in the first hours of Wednesday morning were either killed or fled, as Mirwais Alam, a Rohingya refugee leader, put it. A Bangladeshi foreign ministry official confirmed to The Daily Beast that two of his brothers were among those killed. Nevertheless, as many as 3,000 Rohingyas made it safely to the village of Moria in Bangladesh, near Cox's Bazar, where they were taken into custody by border security forces, according to Burmese and Bangladeshi officials. But the international response to the deaths of the civilians and military personnel has been muted, with U.N. Security Council President and currently arch-competitor of President Donald Trump, Turkey's Recep Tayyip Erdogan, playing what many believe was a significant role. Erdogan, who declared last week that it was time to "eradicate" the Rohingya from Myanmar, also happened to be on an official visit to the United States. He told President Trump in a press conference Wednesday that Myanmar's treatment of the Rohingya was "shameful." Another remarkable U.S. silence amid the bloody fighting that has already claimed the lives of dozens of civilians, of military personnel and of journalists has led many to question whether U.S.

intelligence has judged that the attacks on October 9th were directed by Islamic State or a local Rakhine militant group. The president's son-in-law Jared Kushner, who is currently the point man on Trump's team as they negotiate with North Korea, has come under scrutiny for his handling of the crisis, with observers saying he has been slow to take any action. The fact that Erdogan has pronounced for the United States to intervene to prevent a genocide was ignored by some observers who have accused Erdogan of playing a double c6a93da74d
