The new deal includes an additional 1,600-seat auditorium that has been in use for 15 years and provides for the convenient distribution of temple ordinances— baptisms, confirmations, weddings—to the faithful beyond the temple grounds. The temple opens at 8:30 a.m., six hours later than usual, and will be closed for church services and other events on Saturday and Sunday. A one-cent sales-tax increase is on the ballot for a vote on June 5. While the church won't say how much the new deal will cost, the 2012 temple lease contract, which was signed by the church's Temple and Family History Department and the city of Salt Lake, said the temple costs $150 per year. The levy is estimated to raise more than $7 million over the course of 10 years. The lease requires the church to pay rent for the auditorium it leases from the city for religious ceremonies as a revenue-generating tenant. If the levy passes, the church will use the money to build a new temple in Provo, where the university is located. The church says the extension helps it avoid losing the land at current rent costs. "Temple work is a ministry, and should be included in the core services of the church," said church spokesman Eric Hawkins. Unlike the church's temples in California and Missouri, the Utah facilities are not open to the public. The Salt Lake temple has little parking and provides the most in-depth endowment ceremony in the church's history. It is the last of three temples in Salt Lake to be built in the city, and the only one in the city not along the main thoroughfares. It has just a handful of parking spaces on the property. Photo: John Drescher Image: John Drescher Like all Mormon temples, the Utah site has a sign listing the angel Moroni and the guardian spirits of the temple—Satan, Og, Shemlon, and Mulek—but the sign also identifies the presiding officers: The Lord of Hosts and Joseph Smith Jr. "Their ward boundaries are off, and are not in compliance with the new boundaries," church spokesman Hawkins said. He noted that the site was built in 1960, in the temple era, and has many old buildings that have been replaced. "The new temple had to be built to the church's specifications and is a better fit for Salt Lake City." The temple is typically opened for temple ordinances at 7:45 a.m. and closed at 4:15 p.m. On Saturday, the temple will open at 8:30 a.m., one hour earlier than normal, and close at 4:30 p.m., rather than 5:30 p.m. as usual.
