i can already tell this isnt going to be an easy question for you to answer. its not that i dont want to talk about it, but i just got outta the studio after recording the last album for the album, and it was difficult to get words out. future already knows i think honest is his best album, and thats probably one of the reasons why it caused so much controversy. i think it wasnt necessarily that he didnt want to be "like that" anymore, but that he didn't want to be like that anymore. and theres no doubt that its an album that future was hesitant to put out, but like anyone else, he was curious about what it would do, and what people would say. and for a lot of people, honest did a great job of satisfying that curiosity. i want to tell you, it's the best record i've heard since travis, and honest is the perfect future record. but i know that sounds crazy. i know you could probably imagine a conversation that would sound like it was just as valid as mine. but if you dont listen to the album, just play the song, youll see how its a thing that future made and held onto for almost 2 years. i'm not talking about the album anymore. i'm talking about people saying they love it, and its such a great album, and it means so much to them. people that are invested in that world can tell you how much they love that album, and they would say that, if they were honest, they would never even play it on their own. they love future because of honest, but they would never admit that that was why. they love future because they love that kind of music, because that kind of music has built them up in the world of hip-hop, but they never say that. they say "well, you know, he's just a great rapper". or, "i'm just a big fan".
