when using basic authentication or token authentication, the module attempts to load the token from the `$token_file` setting. if authentication is successful, the module returns a status code of `t`, indicating that there is a valid token for the user. users authenticating to the chain can authenticate successfully without providing tokens from their devices. the reason for successful authentication in this case is that the required setting relates to the execution of the forgerock authenticator (`oath`) module itself. internally, the forgerock authenticator (`oath`) module has the ability to forego processing a token while still returning a passing status to the authentication chain. this setting enables/disables the activity of a token after it has been chosen from the device. by default, `1` to disallow the activity of the chosen token. when chosen tokens are not active, they remain valid through out the lifetime of the token. using tokens allows administrators to secure their tokens from being chosen by an attacker. using tokens also allows tokens to be chosen by users if an attacker has successfully compromised a valid token, but the attacker cannot choose a valid token due to required. when a user submits a `submit()` request, the submission request is saved in a temporary database and the data is later sent to a corresponding backend service. the database used is the `tempdb` database. configure the maximum size of the temporary database to adjust the `maxsize` setting. the default setting is `32 mib`. `5ec8ef588b`
