Gangnam Blues Full HOT Movie Tagalog Version

as ive said, gangnam blues is a fascinating movie. its an origin story of sorts, and it feels like an origin story in that the movie starts out with a few characters, then as it progresses, it fills in the blanks, and develops all the various relationships that make up the main cast. its the classic korean narrative model, and im-deoks screenplay and direction do a good job of making the narrative feel like it is unfolding in real time, its almost like a soap opera, with each of the characters getting their moment in the spotlight, its hard to imagine that gangnam blues will fare any better than the howling, however for a director who has lost his mojo a bit in the past, and had a box office flop to his name, i certainly think that this time ha has found the right formula. while he doesnt set out to remake anything in particular, theres enough nods to old school korean gangster films to give the movie some character. its also refreshing that instead of trying to recreate the old gangster movies, he chooses to make a movie about the present day, and themes that we can all relate to today. for example, the main character roo (played by lee min-ho) grows up in an orphanage, and was adopted by a wealthy woman who looks down on him, only to one day realize that he is a son she never knew she had, the movie also contains a great deal of dark humor, and a lot of it from the main characters and his foul mouth. theres a scene when roo and his friend jiwon are smoking a joint in a hotel room, and one of them asks the other who the president is. the other answers with a slew of obscenities, with each word being more vulgar than the previous one. its a well written scene, and part of what makes the movie so fun to watch.
