while the turkish military has been less than forthright in its declarations, the turkish government has been less than silent. turkey has been working with the united states to tighten the noose around the pkk. in april 2016, the turkish national intelligence organisation (mit) declared that the pkk was a terrorist organisation. in january this year, mits deputy head hakan fidan was quoted by the turkish press as saying that the ypgs political wing, the democratic union party, was also a terrorist organisation. in may of the same year, fidan reaffirmed the mits stance that the pkk is a terrorist organisation, while declaring that the ypg is a terrorist group. shortly thereafter, turkish president recep tayyip erdogan called for the united states to ban the democratic union party and the ypg, declaring that turkey would not accept any ypg presence in syria. in june, erdogan addressed parliament with a formal declaration that the pkk was an enemy of the state. turkey does not want to be in a position where it has to choose between the pkk and the ypg. it has already made its choice, and it is a choice which will define turkey for decades to come. the turkish military, meanwhile, has been quietly preparing for an invasion of syria. this began in earnest as early as november 2014, as evidenced by the fact that it has been shelling the border with syria since then. more recently, however, the turks began to deploy significant quantities of heavy weaponry on their border. turkish-backed fighters have been known to use us-supplied tow anti-tank guided missiles and russian-made igla surface-to-air missiles. since the syrian war began, turkish-backed fighters have also been involved in heavy clashes with the syrian regime and its allies. the idf has also published photographs of syrian anti-aircraft missiles that were captured from syrian military bases and turned over to the turks.

in 2007, turkey became the first country to provide birth control injections to teenagers under age 15. the government has also eased restrictions on abortion and drug use, yet, as of august 2012, the abortion rate had increased. the 2012 turkish abortion statistics, however, are still preliminary.

the following year, the turkish ministry of health conducted a survey, revealing that 75 percent of turkish women had experienced induced abortions, compared to only 29 percent in 1991. in 2012, turkey ranked no. 1 among countries, with the highest percentage of induced abortions, in the united nations world health statistics. in july 2009, a series of violent clashes broke out between kurkish militants and turkish police in the turkish-kurdish enclave of silopi. the violence spread to several turkish cities, resulting in the deaths of at least 30 people, and injuring over 150 more. since then, erdogans justice and development party (akp), in power since 2002, has systematically bludgeoned the countrys kurdish minority. while the akp government has tried to avoid turning the conflict into a war, it has used economic pressure against the countrys kurdish minority. in early 2010, erdogans government began fining the kurdish national congress (knc) millions of dollars, while the knc, an umbrella group that represents most of the country's Kurds, was forbidden from holding rallies or campaigns. The AKP also barred the KNC from mobilizing its members. The elections in June 2011 have led to the worst electoral result for the AKP in Turkey's history. The party received only 28 percent of the vote and lost its parliamentary majority for the first time since coming to power in 2002.
