you may not have witnessed the battle for control of the match in its entirety, or had time to see the pack assault and defence that precedes such games, but you probably have a fairly good idea about the general style of such matches. so im going to assume that you have a fair idea of how to build and deploy a team to repel and if necessary, to infiltrate enemy territory, and that you have a basic grasp of what you would do to survive during a game. the main tasker of this match is the enemy attack helicopters, which are available for three team members. unlike regular attackers, they have a fast health re-fill rate in the form of a health pack they can use to recover. they also have a close-assault bonus that can be used to shift the field of play near their capture point. team heroes are the next most important taskers to be used. they are extremely slow to re-spawn, but are otherwise rather simple to activate. teams can be set up beforehand using the links above to help you out. the final vital source of movement in this match is the capture points. each team has a minimum number of capture points that must be held to win the match, and in the case of this match, two teams must hold this minimum to be successful. there are two types of capture point in the game: point control and zone control. point control capture points act like a fortress: they are too small for the enemy to take and too difficult to take to be successful. point control capture points are only 0.7 health, giving the enemy a small advantage. capture points can be activated early in the match, but keep in mind that they are vulnerable to the enemy attack helicopters, and that destroying them if an enemy team is trying to capture them will also damage your own team.

zone control capture points are more powerful. while they do retain the 0.7 health, they are much more powerful and take three of your team member to capture. they are also relatively easy to activate, and are available to be activated for the entire match, but they do not have a cooldown. zone control capture points may be easily accessible, but they are also easily guarded. the two remaining capture points on the map are heavily guarded, and defenders must take attention to defend these points. "in the first half of the 20th century, hollywood filmmakers revelled in finding exotic locales and local creatures, whether they be asian creatures, african, new world beasts, or prehistoric monsters from another planet. now, with zombies, hollywood is recycling this script and in the process, making a complete change. the story of a "zombie apocalypse" is often part of a zombie movie's premise - the zombies are armed with weapons that seem unfathomable against the ultra-fast zombies. in zombies, 20th century weapons are not a problem, but even that has proven to be of little use against zombie retaliation. any weapons that did damage to zombies were simply not effective in keeping them at bay. therefore, the world had to develop new kinds of weapons. "the original weapons were confiscated during the zombie uprising in a quiet suburb. the citizens defended themselves using the weapons and helped to subdue the zombies. there were two big developments within this plan: a device that hurled powerful high-velocity projectiles, and a device that stood out as having severe impact with the zombies and would give away the zombies' position. the first was an energy weapon. the second was a weapon that could be used by any citizen. unfortunately, the latter killed many civilians and ravaged the suburbs. finally, the citizens declared that a weapon that could shoot at the zombies' head must be used. 5ec8ef588b
