you can move on to somebody else, right? so i think a lot of people really struggle with that. and i know i was, even to this day, i really struggle with that. and as much as i loved my career because i found someone who loved me back, i do struggle. and i think its just time and practice. and the good news is, is that you really wont, in your smaller networking events, walk out of your room and say, i just met, you know, a bunch of new

people. you're going to say, hey, how are you? what are you working on? what are your interests? all of these are great questions to ask. and if you do that, i think that you will find, and i know, that if you're willing to push the pressure a little bit, you will find that people, who don't know you, are more willing to fill in those blanks. you know, i think it's also the fear of making a mistake. you know, i've got a lot of anxiety about this, but my friend just turned to me and said, oh, do you really think, you know, how you're going to step out of the other person that knows you and meet somebody else and have a conversation with them. you know, but in the context of that conversation, you're really not going to want to say, oh, so what do you do?

what do you? do you belong? do you know each other? do you go to the same church? oh, i cant believe it, ive run into, you know, you. you have some kind of connection. maybe that wasnt exactly your relationship, but a few years ago, you know, i was at a conference and somebody was joking, you know, like this is so great, you know, because, you know, we met at this conference. and it wasnt. and i was like, oh no. you know. and theyre like, and you know, thats why we actually hung out and hung out and hung out and you know, actually got along. you know, were just having a conversation with each other. and i was like, i get it. i know what that was like. and its not about that. its not about a relationship. its

about, you know, identifying a connection and saying, okay, i see, you know, i get it. and you can actually build a relationship out of that, but you really start the conversation saying what youve always been able to say and thats, how are you? what are you working on? and everyone is going to connect with you that way, right? so its so important to just say, what are you working on? what are you interested in? what are you invested in? what do you do for fun? what are you a fan of? what do you like to do? and hopefully people are able to connect with you on an identity level and not on a relationship level, because we all know that its just hard to get along with someone when were like that.

so if you were me, you would just kind of like, you know, casually like, you know, what do you do for fun? and like, well, you know, what brings you out here? and then you would just kind of casually, you know, like, you know, you could always say, you know, do you like to, you know, you could mention that you like to get out and walk your dogs. or you could, you know, talk about, you know, the kids. you know, you could talk about your kids. and then i would ask you, you know, what do you do for fun? and then i would just try to start to get a little bit more information about them, because it gives you a little bit of an insight about them and it gives you a little bit of insight into what type of, you know, you know, its an ice breaker, right so like i said, its a little different, and its very easy to do, and its very easy to get out of the way, right. so, now for the next hour, i want to talk with you. i want to tell you about a couple of things that ive learned about small talk, and hopefully, as we go through this, youll have some good ideas for yourself. youll have some ideas for when youre out in the world, and youre gonna get out of the house, and you need to, you know, just put yourself out there and interact with people. i want to show you what i did wrong. and i want to show you what i did right. and if you pay attention and you work, i think you can learn how to do this.

okay. so, here are the things i dont do and here are the things that i do do. i do not like small talk that goes on forever. i think thats boring. why are you here? what were you doing there? i have nothing to say to that. im not going to say it. im not going to say anything. so im going to be quiet and shut up and listen. 5ec8ef588b
