make sure you have enough virtual memory in your virtual machine if it is possible that your application will get limited on vm ram. for example if you have 10 gb of virtual memory and you allocate 8 gb you will not have enough ram for your vm. if you don't have a monitoring app you will not notice when you use all of your virtual memory available. virtualization-based products like parallels desktop for mac, parallels desktop, vmware fusion, virtuozzo, xen, kvm for linux, desktop virtualization for windows include a vm daemon and can be installed & run on os x, linux, windows, and other operating systems. the primary advantage of running a virtual machine is that you can run multiple operating systems at the same time. os x supports the vm technology built into the operating system. you can create a virtual machine using an apple thunderbolt display and a usb or thunderbolt-connected external hard drive. gosney got the idea while using a number of graphics cards to test gpu brute force cracking. in fact, his startup company, geeks for computers, already provides an online service based on his technique called "computers on a chip." but pc play seems the way to go. gosney has since started a new company called sunforce, which touts a pci card adapter that's compatible with most computer motherboards and can be purchased for $20. the card plugs into any pci or pci-e slot, and sunforce sells a software tool that will let users chain together multiple cards, thereby creating a massive gpu cluster. sunforce is currently working with a number of prominent publishers to create what they call the pandoras box, a device containing up to 1,000 graphics cards. pandoras box is still a prototype, however, with no real commercial product on the horizon. but it shows that gosney and company have a lot of work left to do.
