the system registers for interruption notification messages whenever audio is stopped or lost. this includes if the user switches to another app or the computer is shutdown. to get a notification that an interruption is about to occur, register for `avaudiosessioninterruptionnotification`. when that notification arrives, you can call `setcategory` to change the current category, and call `setactive` to re-activate your audio session. when your app is in the foreground, the system deactivates audio if the user switches to another app or shuts down the computer. if your app is in the background and wants to play audio, you must register for interruption notification messages and explicitly reactivate your audio session. the system will continue to play audio but will not interrupt the music app. if you think of a device as an airport, with apps represented as taxiing airplanes, the system serves as a sort of control tower. your app can make audio requests and state its desired priority, but final authority over what happens on the tarmac comes from the system. you communicate with the control tower using the audio session. srs hd audio lab was developed to work on windows xp, windows vista, windows 7, windows 8, windows 10 or windows 11 and is compatible with 32 or 64-bit systems. the common filenames for the program's installer are hdal.exe or sandboxwpf.exe etc. this free tool was originally created by srs labs, inc. the following versions: 1.1 and 1.0 are the most frequently downloaded ones by the program users. srs hd audio lab is included in multimedia tools.
