ActiveX System Monitor is a lightweight widget that can keep track of the average CPU load of your system, thus showing you exactly how much CPU your applications are currently hogging. This type of tool can be helpful to users who frequently work with high-demanding programs, such as video games and feature-packed graphic editing suites. The interface of the widget is based on a small frame which you can move to any position on the screen, with the help of the mouse cursor. The average CPU value is established according to a graphical representation with the CPU load for each core; ActiveX System Monitor supports up to 16 CPU cores. In addition, you can view the current physical, paging and virtual memory usage, along with additional memory information, namely the memory in use, total and available physical memory, size of the paging file, available space in the paging file, virtual memory size and available space in the virtual memory. The small app does not put a strain on the computer's resources, as it uses a low amount of CPU and system memory. It has a good response time and worked smoothly during our testing, without hanging, crashing or displaying error dialogs; we have not encountered any difficulties. Thanks to its intuitive layout and overall simplicity, less experienced users can seamlessly figure out how to work with this app. Unfortunately, no recent updates have been made to ActiveX System Monitor.
