Peri-implant soft tissue response after loading of a single or two implants: a pilot study in dogs. The aim of the study was to evaluate the peri-implant soft tissue response to implant loading of a single or two adjacent implants. The study was a blinded, randomized, controlled histological and histomorphometric pilot study. Four beagle dogs received two implants in the right and left premolar region of the mandible, and two implants in the left maxilla. Each dog received two implants in each side of the maxilla or mandible in four different positions, including one interproximal site (peri-implant position). The control sites (group 1) were located in the premolar region, between two healthy teeth. The test sites (group 2) were adjacent to a healthy tooth. A bone window was prepared for implant f988f36e3a
