The new Photoshop looks fantastic. The Aqua grid view is a tiny bit thinner than in 4.6/4.6.2. But, that's a minor detail. I like that Lightroom 5 now has live text (i.e. the script looks exactly the same as you had written it, literally). Photoshop has much better vector handling now. And, the layers and effects module remind me less about the paint program than it used to. Here's some things where they missed improvements:

- Text. In 4.6, you had to select text and then press again to get an edit box for text. In 5.0, it's already. Not sure why they didn't do this for text in 4.6.2, while adding it for shapes. This is IMO a huge win. And every user will copy/paste text in 4.6 and 4.6.2. Note that, unlike in 4.6/4.6.2, text in 5.0 is displayed as unintelligible symbols in the border. I guess it's because of the way the text was implemented. Hopefully, in the upcoming 6.0, text will be properly translated to the Windows system language. After installing the new version, it, however, seems to be hard-coded to my system language. Also, in 5.0, the updated font Apollo doesn't fit to the final text's size, as it did in 4.6.2. On my Windows PC, just as in 4.6, the Photoshop installer itself takes up even more space (5.1 GB vs 4.3 GB in v4). That's less than half of the other Windows applications I use. The main reason for this is that Photoshop is the simplest one in the suite and also contains the fewest features. As a matter of fact, the only thing which requires options anymore is its 3D controls. This is also printed in a separate panel, next to the main options.
