This tool enables you to insert a macro into Microsoft Internet Explorer browser. While you can add a macro of any name, this tool allows you to configure the macro to perform desired actions and run macro on specified URLs. KEY MACRO Macros - Identify the macro which you can use with the new keyword. This is a very useful feature in case you have more than one macro that you want to use. You may also do a blank macro to add a new macro KEY MACRO Name - Name your macro and select the macro which you want to be executed. KEY MACRO Description - To display the description of macro which is being selected in the list of macros. KEY MACRO OnClick - Select the macro you want to execute. The action will happen on the browser window after you click on the macro. KEY MACRO OnKey - Select the macro you want to execute. The action will happen on the browser window after you hit a specified key. KEY MACRO Disable - Disable the selected macro. KEY MACRO StartRecord - Start Macro Record. KEY MACRO StopRecord - Stop Macro Record. KEY MACRO Export - Export the macros. NOTE: Because this is the top result, I'm not going to link to this. I've used this myself. It's in the list of reasons I'd use a browser extension: Saving your choices for websites to revisit. I prefer to use this instead of using a bookmark, because you can just get back to the exact page you were on. You don't have to go to the site and choose to "open link in a new tab" or whatever. It's just there, waiting for you. A: There are many extensions that allow you to customize the way you open a link. For instance: Bookmark This Page - Reminder Goo.gl - Save websites to your goo.gl account Awesomebar - Quick access to all your links from one place. A: I use QuickBookmarks on Chrome. It's a Firefox addon that is like having multiple bookmarks but more versatile. It shows you all the links you've bookmarked in one place. This has been incredibly useful to me in the past for sites I visit often, and find myself going back to again and again. Q: Is there a way to add a "Parent Folder" to a File object that already exists 2edc1e01e8
