My Name Is Khan is a 2010 Indian biographical drama written and directed by Kabir Khan. The film stars Emraan Hashmi in the lead role of an autistic man who is adopted by a wealthy family after winning an iddat ceremony. Ram Avtar Desai, Chief Producer of the film, said at the launch: “The role of a child in India’s society is a very important and challenging one. Many research papers and publications have been written on child labour. Our film addresses many of the issues on child labour. The film should play a part in the prevention and rehabilitation of child labourers.” In the film, the young son of a poor, urban couple named Salim (Kunal) lives in a world of his own. His life changes forever when his parents adopt him as their son. Salim, though a ‘Neet’, is still learning new things. He loves cricket and becomes the toast of the local cricket club, and often hangs out with his cricket-crazy friends. Like all children, he has a handful of friends. But his real friends are other children whose parents are non-resident Indian (NRI) returnees from abroad. The only salutatorian in his school, he is voted the winner of the iddat certificate. Salim is apprehensive about his future, as being an adopted child makes him a social outcast in his own country. He struggles to understand the indigenous system of etiquette, with its rigid social order. Is it possible for someone like him to ever be a good Indian? A running theme in the film is that there is no caste in cricket. But that is not enough for this ‘non-cricketer’. Salim, though he doesn’t understand the meaning of the traditional Indian social code, is determined to be a good Indian. Meanwhile, the film’s central character, who is no less determined to be a good Indian, is the autistic child, Kunal. The film also stars Boman Irani, Soha Ali Khan, Qavi Khan, Mohit Raina, Pooja Ghai, Aadhi Sharma and Achyut Saurabh. The film marks the debut of filmmaker Kabir Khan. It was filmed at locations in New Delhi, Bangkok, London, Dubai and Karachi. The sound track has been composed by Aadesh Srivastava. The principal photography of the film began on July 2009 in
